INF News
Africa Rising

This season, it’s the African countries that are providing a rich vein of thrilling international netball talent.

INF member countries around the world have always looked outside their own borders for ideas, for support, and for competition. At the elite level, our coaches and umpires crisscross the globe, while initiatives like Netball Safaris enable our enthusiastic netball volunteers to travel abroad to share their skills and develop as individuals. For the world’s most talented netballers there are now opportunities to leave home and play in national league sides in countries as diverse as England, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand, benefitting from amazing facilities, training, media exposure and sponsorship. Netball World looks at the challenges and rewards for the players and their hosts.

“We have always known that Africa is a huge reservoir of netball talent. It’s great now to see that talent realised on the world stage.” – The Hon. Molly Rhone, OJ, CD.

ANZ Championship
To play in the ANZ Championship is regarded as a prestigious achievement in a netballer’s career. Currently Malawian Mwai Kumwenda is Africa’s only representative in the league, and competition for contracts for imports is particularly fierce. However, it is hoped that more African players will get the opportunity to showcase their talents on this stage.

Singapore Netball Super League
Singapore has demonstrated huge commitment to developing international netball. As in previous years, one place in each of the country’s Super League teams was offered to an international import, with four Botswanans and two Fijians jetting out to Singapore to take on the challenge.

English Netball Superleague
England’s top competition is becoming increasingly international. Its Class of 2015 have previously plied their trade in countries as diverse as Jamaica, Grenada, South Africa, Namibia, Uganda, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand.

Netball World cover star, South African Bongiwe Msomi was instrumental in Surrey Storm being crowned Superleague champions, and spoke highly of her time in England. Loughborough Lightning is a team that has embraced the opportunity to enhance their squad with an international contingent, by recruiting two South Africans and a Ugandan.
